You ask me to write you a sonnet, My fancies to fix as they rise. Shall it be on your brow or your bonnet? Shall it be on your lips or your eyes? will take from my pallet some carmine, And mix with the powder of pearls, Till the coldest grows warm with the charm i The cheek that lies under your curls. I will snatch from the sunset its roses

The bloom on your lips to portray-From the woodbine the sweets it discloses, The sweets they conceal to display, I will rob the gaze'le of the splendor That lives in her languishing glance, But to show that your own is more tender, And soft as a dream of romance. will ask Mr. Espy, the warder,

Who watches the storm clouds on high, Just to give them a hint, or an order, To send me a flash for your eye. A flash not to dazzle or blind us But soft as the summer eve shows When love lies in ambush to bind us, And fancy the fetter bestows. I will dive for fresh pearls in their casket, Far down in their coral sea-bower-May loan me her string for an hour.

And flatly refuse the request. will beg of the streamlet a dimple Only think how the dimple will please, I will place one on each side the portal, Your lips, like twin rubies, shut in-Or, if two are too much for one mortal, Then one shall be set in your chin. To slacken the flow of its stream, Will practice in Montgomery, Bath, Powell, and While I seize the soft moonbeams that quiver And laugh in the light of its gleam. will beg of the black cloud that lowers. To let the glad sunlight shine through Till I've caught from the rain beaded flowers A smile that is worthy of you I will pray yonder shadow one minute To pause on that summit of snow, Till my pencil I've time to dip in it,

> Its gloss to transfer to your hair. I will borrow the wave of the willow, As it sways in the summer-wind sweet-Cr, shadow your grace in the billow That gracefully swells to my feet. His Venus bewitching and warm-Perhaps Mr. Powers will send me A model to picture your form. I will ask of the syrens to sing me The song to Ulysses they sung-Perchance the soft cadenge may bring me The voice on whose music I hung. I will beg Jenny Lind, in a letter, To waft me one nightingale tone-If it speaks to my heart like your own,

May I perish if e'er I forget her, I will borrow of Cupid a feather To impart the last exquisite touch. That the canvass may show altogether, Nor a light, nor a shadow too much, And now that I have finished my sketching, I will brush from the butterfly's wing Its powder to sprinkle my etching, . And make it exactly the thing. will ask of Petrarca to write me How Laura resisted his rhyme, Perhaps the poor fellow, to spite me, May say, "you will learn it in time:" And since that with him it's all over,

"Miss Laura may tell if she choose That ladies like best for a lover A man not in love with a muse." I have done, but what good will it do me To plead to your obdurate heart? You've forgot the request you sent me The artist, and may be, his art. You've forgot all the day dreams we cherished.

The vows and the hopes and the fears-From my sky that the rainbow has perished, And that nothing is left but its tears.

Harper's New Monthly Magazine. Critical Notices of the Press. The most popular Monthly in the world .- New York Observer

We must refer in terms of eulogy to the high tone and varied excellences of HARPER'S MAGA-ZINE-a journal with a monthly circulation about 170,000 copies—in whose pages are to be found some of the choicest light and general reading of the day. We speak of this work as an evidence of the culture of the American people; and the popularity it has acquired is mer-ited. Each Number contains fully 144 pages of reading-matter appropriately illustrated with good wood-cuts; and it combines in itself the racy monthly and the more philosophical quarterly, blended with the best features of the daily journal. It has great power in the dis-semination of a love of pure literature.—Trubner's Guide to American Literature, London.
We can account for its success only by the imple fact that it meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a variety of pleasing and instructive reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Box-
